It is pretty doubtful about the Rebekahs getting the boys that rode the Hutchinson goat to join their lodge. They declare that they can only be persuaded upon condition that they import no foreign goats for the occasion.

The Haven "Item" outfit has been boxed up and will be shipped out of town. I understand the editor will get him a new outfit (probably a rubber stamp outfit) and as long as wrapping paper lasts he will continue to give the public nothing for something.

The editor of the "Item," in his last issue, used nearly two sides of a half sheet of fairly good wrapping paper in trying to tell his half dozen subscribers that your correspondent was a "misguided over zealous individual," etc., because we gave the public a little fresh news in a paper that has some circulation in this community. When he says we undertook to defend the Ladies' Aid society, he simply lies. We did not undertake to defend them or anyone else, neither did we intimate that he owed the society an unpaid bill but gave the harmless item simply as a matter of news. There was no putting to or taking from, but was just as your correspondent overheard it, and Mowder must have had "his skite on" or he have taken no offense. We candidly admit that it was written without the authority or sanction of the ladies, but as we have heard no complaint from them it must have been generally endorsed notwithstanding Mr. Mowder has not been "officially" notified of that fact. And, then, his royal highness was awfully grieved because we mentioned the fact that there was a real live boot-legger in town, and "intimated" that we were talking through our headgear. Now, everyone in this place knows that there was a traveling boot-legger here for three or four weeks that did a thriving business and he promptly took the hint given him and departed inside of the threatened ten days. Of course a good moral man like Mowder as well as a W. C. T. U. lecturer (?) is not supposed to know of these things, hence his innocence. All that the matter with this offending paragraph is, he wants to try and make the people believe he's "bused and thereby gain sympathy and incidentally increase his circulation. If he would really like to know what became of the confiscated beverages your correspondent can furnish him with that information and considerable more that would make mighty interesting reading for the public as well as himself.

Castleton.

Miss Maggie Hallgren and pupils of her school, district No. 12, and all the patrons of the school with many of the adjoining neighbors assembled in the school house at Castleton on Washington's birthday. Each matron and young lady having her basket well filled with a variety of friends to met the requirements of all and much to spare. Seats were in demand and many stood on the platform; the tables were renewed at least four times, when cloth and tables were removed, Miss Hallgren with program in hand called on the selected choir to sing "America," all doing their part in a professional musical order, Miss Maud McDonough presided at the organ. The choir responded several times with, "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," "Red White and Blue," with other patriotic songs. The pupils all acted their parts well. The first on the program was a class of all the largest children, marched to music in single procession, each carrying the banner of freedom and each in turn repeating a verse in praise of Washington; another class of boys marched in single file having hatchets formed and plated with tin foil. They made a good showing and brought to the minds of many the story of the "cherry tree and hatchet." All the scholars responded to the call of their teacher without a murmur showing they were taught to be obedient. Little Norman Fall, if we can judge from appearance cannot be more than 4 years old, when called, without delay walked to the stand and plainly spoke his piece without a mistake. Mr. Butler Shore and lady were present and Mr. Shore occupied the stand a short time and delivered his selection in a manner worthy of praise and Miss May Hickey read a paper; many others paid a tribute to the memory of our warior and statesman. The day will be long remembered by the children. No improper word or act occurred to mar the proceedings and all went home well gratified for honoring the 163rd birthday of the father of the republic.
